

Dear Karen,

I received an email from a friend recently that made time stand still for me. She shared that she is a completely different person than she was one year ago. She just finished Bob Goff's book Love Does and it spoke to her. She shared that she wakes up everyday and accepts an invitation to live a life of complete engagement, a life of whimsy, a life where love does. She shared that the invitation doesn't come in an envelope, it is ushered in by a sunrise, the sound of a bird, or the smell of coffee drifting lazily from the kitchen. She shared that it is the invitation to actually live, to fully participate in this amazing life for one more day and that she now takes it and refuses to turn it down, ever again. My friend shared that one of the reasons for this was through Chicktime, the children we serve, and me... she learned to be this new person.

I have to be honest, to date, this is the best compliment I have ever received. I bawled like a baby. I simply had no idea how much impact our chapter and my friendship had made.

Two things I would love to highlight from this experience. For those of you living your lives on purpose engaged in the work you were meant to accomplish, NEVER underestimate the impact you are making and DON'T QUIT, especially when it gets hard. And second, if someone has made an impact in your life, reach out to them today. Share the impact they have made in your life... it will most likely come as a complete surprise... and take their breath away!

Joyfully,
